There once lived a baker called Ling.
He worked hard all year long.
Ling was busiest in early fall.
That was when the village celebrated the Moon Festival.

Ling baked delicious mooncakes.
He filled them with sweet bean paste.

A giant named Kong lived in the woods outside the village.
His wife was named Song.

Kong was a grumpy giant.
“The village is too noisy,” he said.
“There are too many people.”

But Kong still wanted to celebrate the Moon Festival.
