What does the man
in the picture do?
How can you tell?

Once upon a time, there was a poor woodcutter who lived near a forest. Each morning, he got out of bed, took his axe and went to the forest to chop wood. He had a caring wife who baked bread and pancakes for his lunch.

"Good morning, Wendy! Your pancakes and bread smell delicious!"

"Thank you, William. Don't eat them now! They're for your lunch!"

That day William chopped a lot of wood and made a big bundle. He was hungry and it was time for him to eat.

"I'll enjoy my lunch and get some water from the well," he thought.

Wendy had baked a lot of pancakes and William couldn't finish them all. He didn't want to throw the last one away. "I'll leave the pancake on the well. If someone is hungry, they can eat it."

What is William eating?
What did he drink?

The Woodcutter and the Fairy

by Katherine Reilly & Jenny Dooley

William and Wendy are poor but generous people. Every day, they leave food for Fay, a fairy who lives in a well. Fay thanks them by leaving a gold coin each time. What will happen when two jealous neighbours want the gold coins for themselves?
