TALK ABOUT TEXTS

Greedy Anansi

A Tale from West Africa

Retold by Anita Mullick

Illustrated by Paula Wendland

Greedy Anansi

A Tale from West Africa

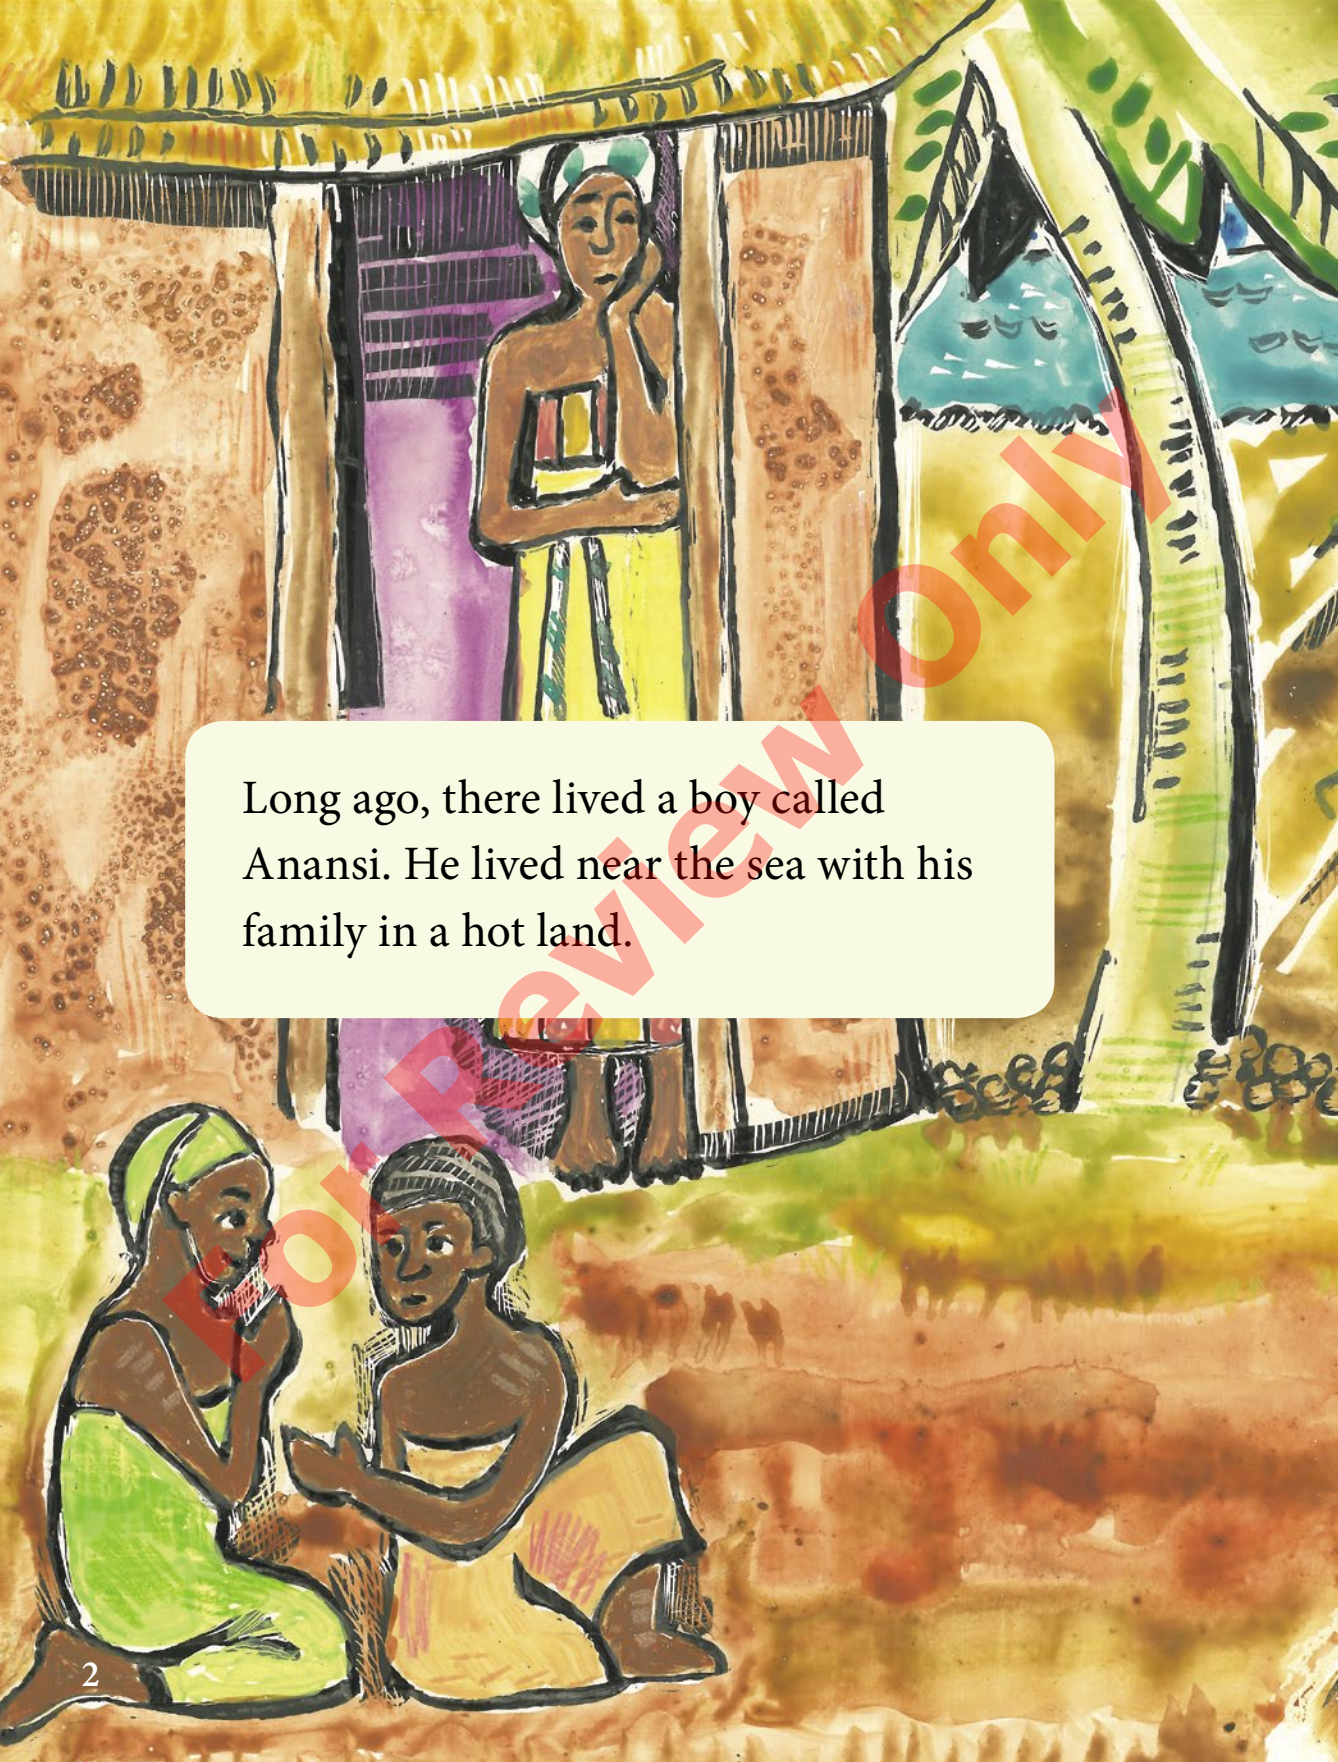

For Review Only

Retold by Anita Mullick

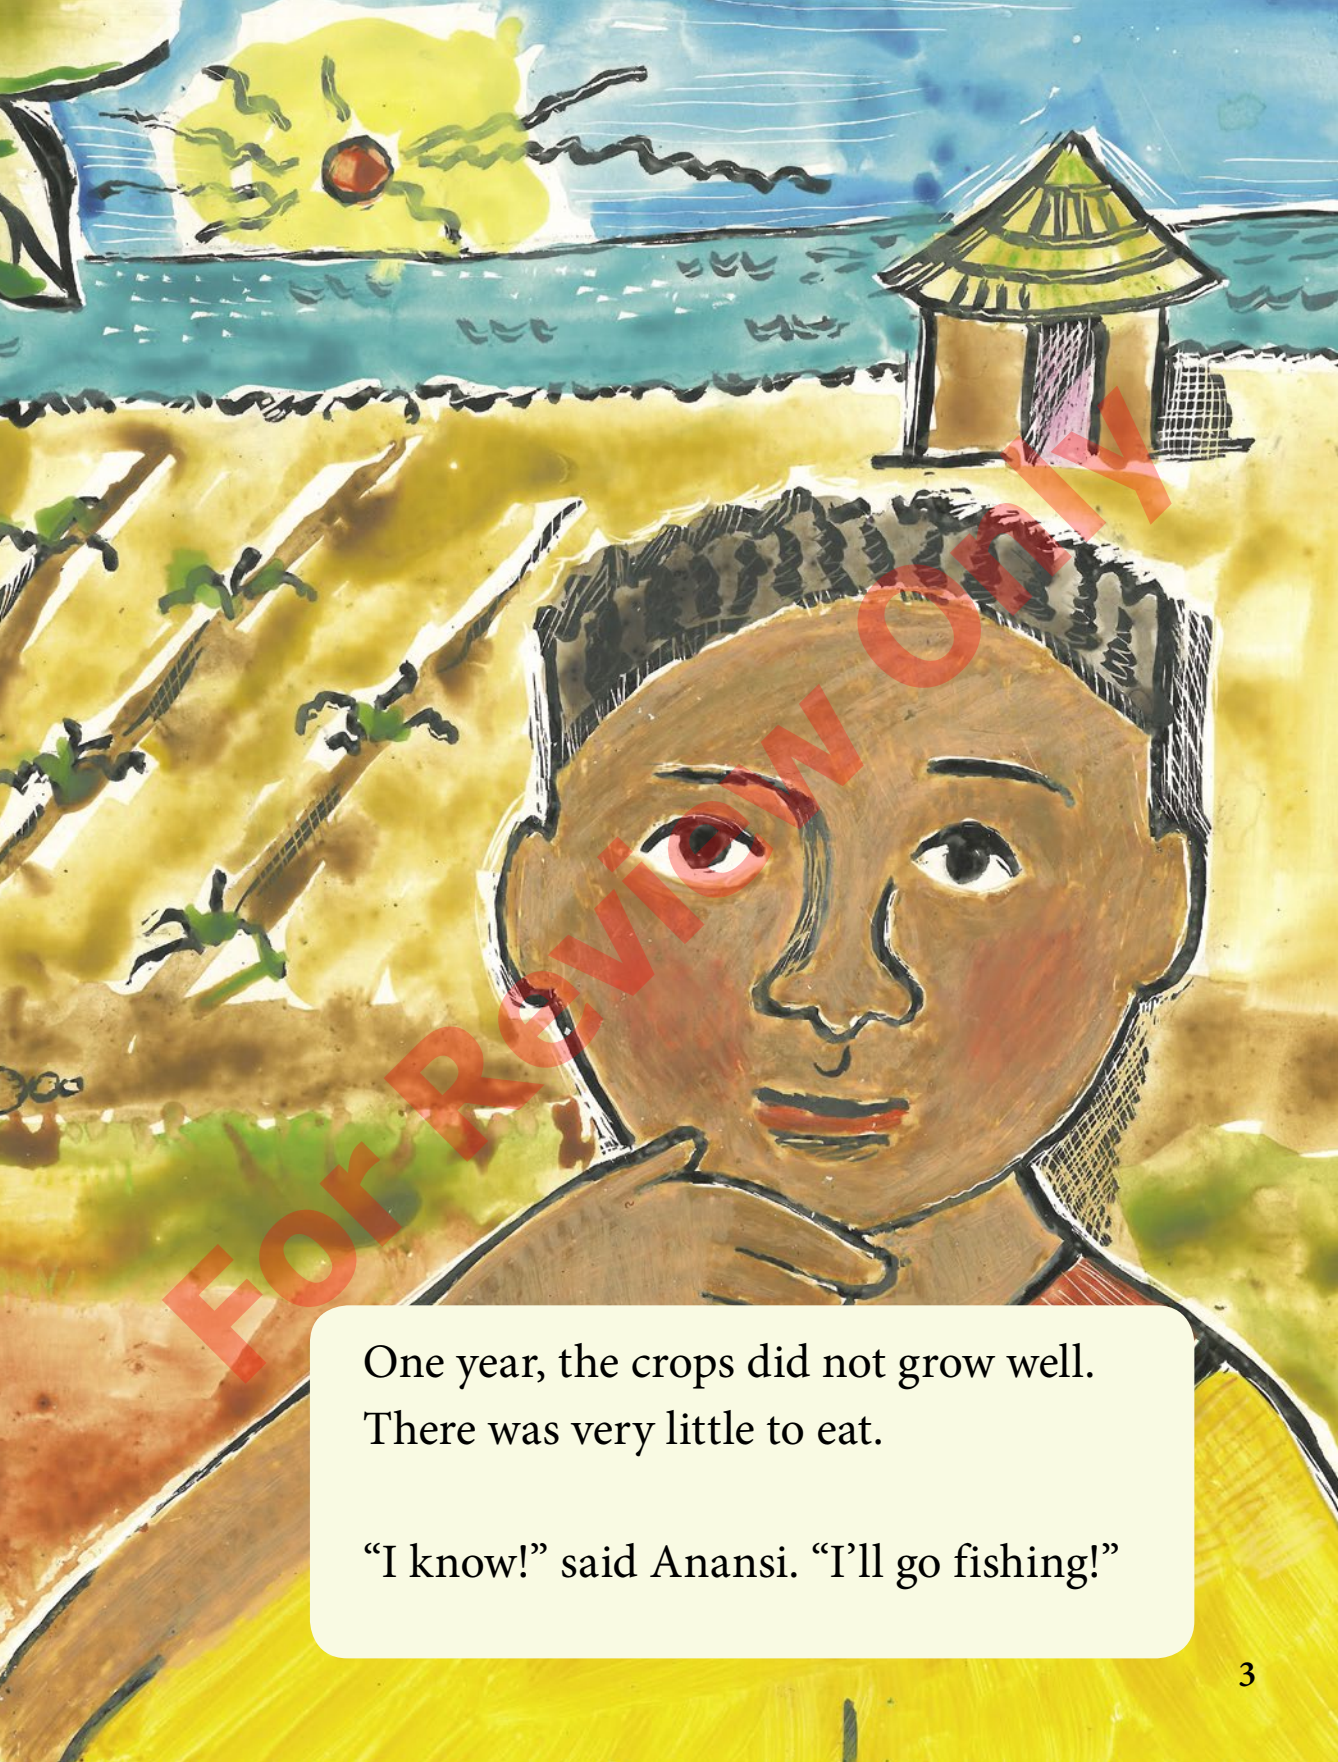

Illustrated by Paula Wendland

macmillan education

Long ago, there lived a boy called Anansi. He lived near the sea with his family in a hot land.

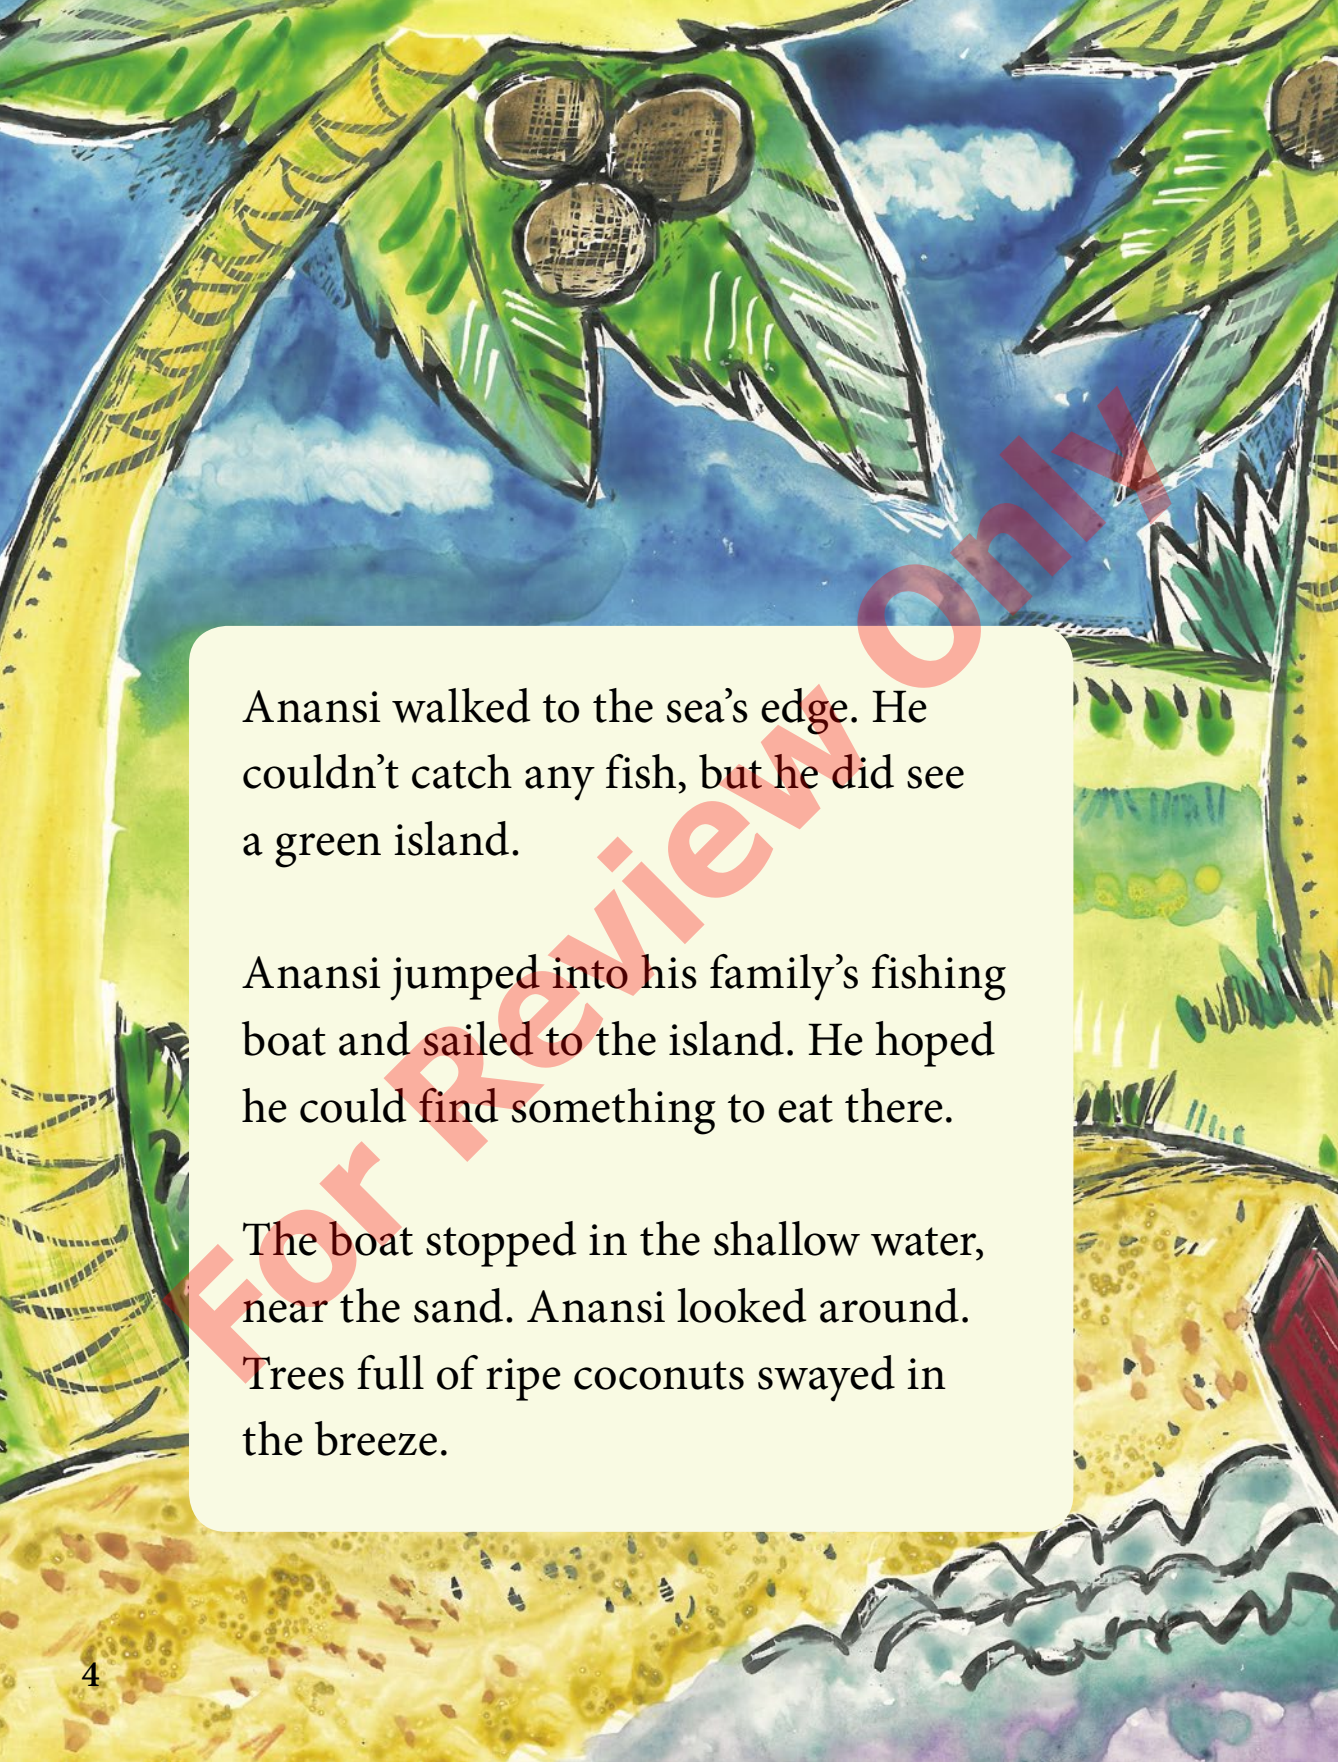

For Review Only

One year, the crops did not grow well.
There was very little to eat.

"I know!" said Anansi. "I'll go fishing!"

For Review Only

Anansi walked to the sea's edge. He couldn't catch any fish, but he did see a green island.

Anansi jumped into his family's fishing boat and sailed to the island. He hoped he could find something to eat there.

The boat stopped in the shallow water, near the sand. Anansi looked around. Trees full of ripe coconuts swayed in the breeze.

For Review Only

For Review Only