

Lizzie's Dream

Written by Celia Doyle
Illustrated by Nelle Davis

Lizzie loved looking at the snow-covered mountains she could see from her classroom.

If I could fly over them, I could find out what's on the other side, she thought.

For teachers' inspection ONLY

For teachers' inspection ONLY

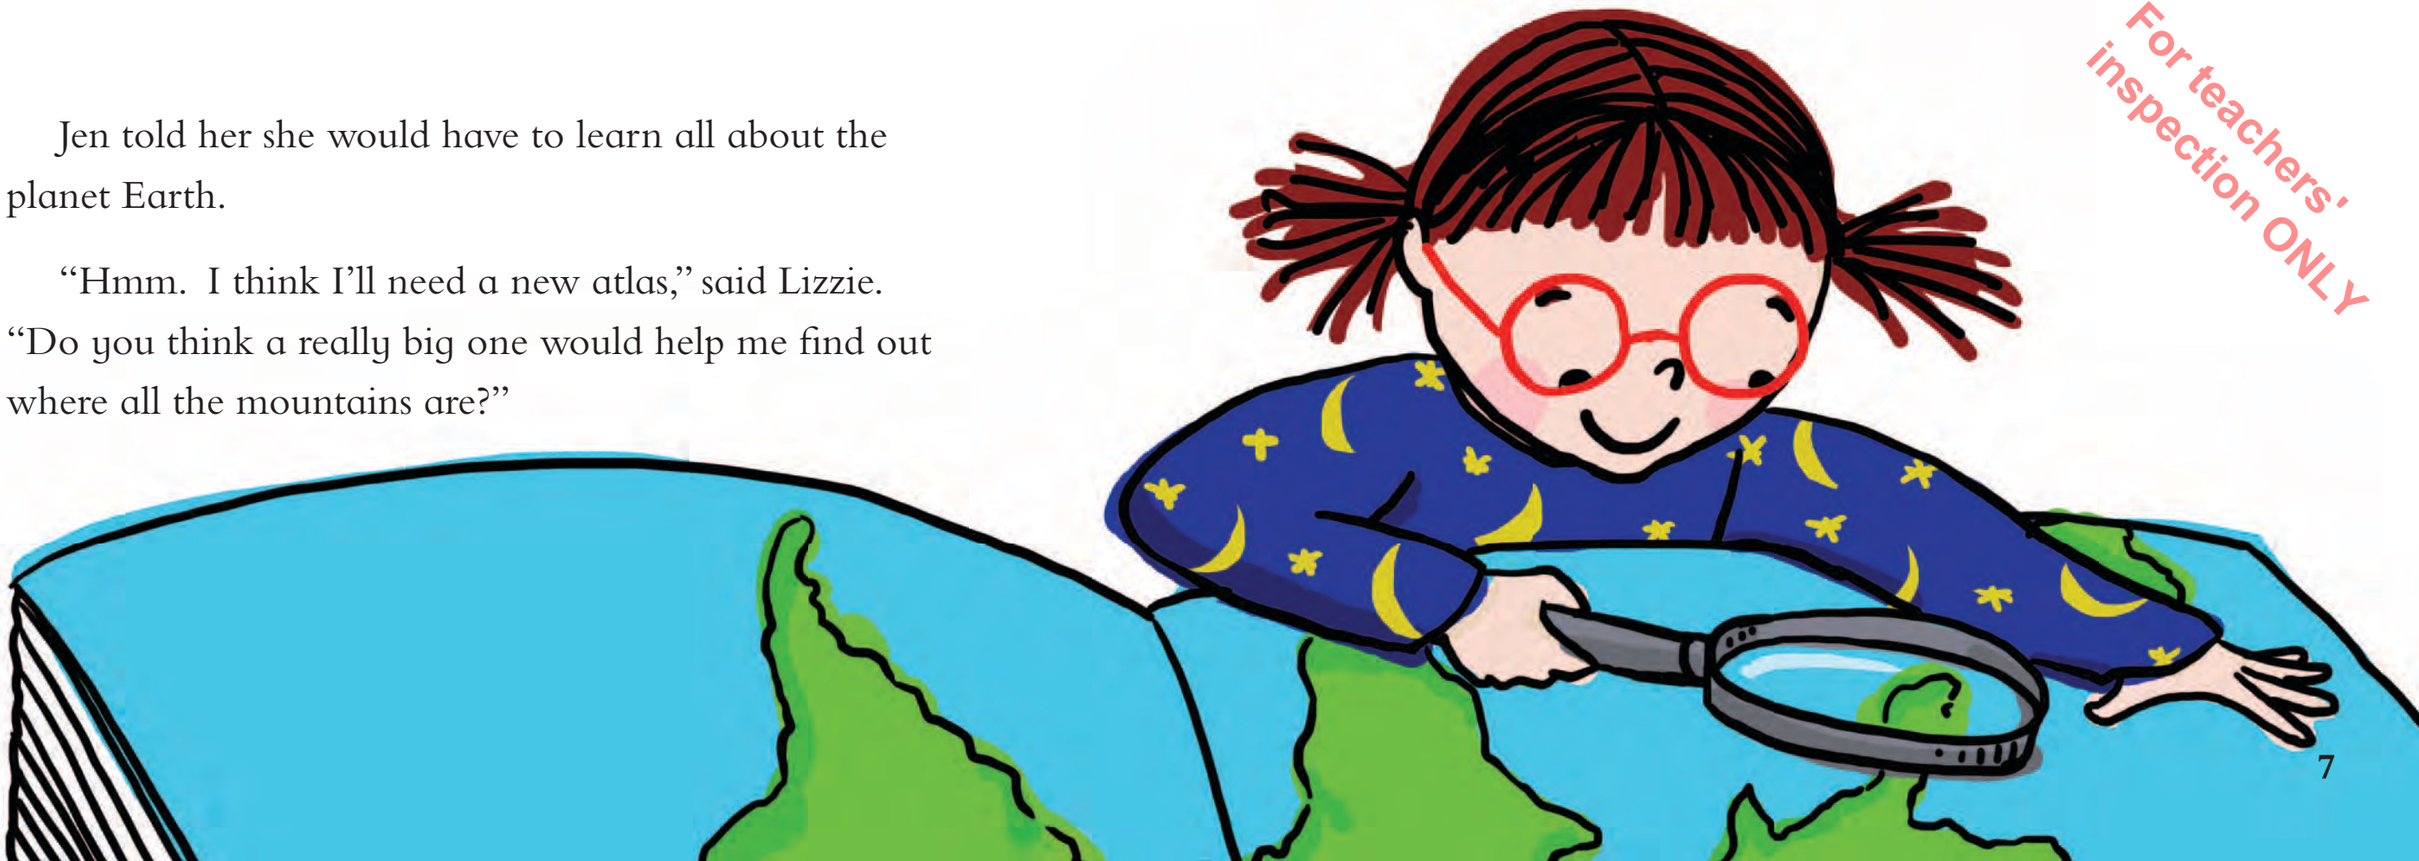

So one day, Lizzie told her friends she was going to be a pilot. Sam told her she would have to be good at math.

"Yes. I will have to work at that," said Lizzie. "I'm not too bad, but I could be better!"

Jen told her she would have to learn all about the planet Earth.

"Hmm. I think I'll need a new atlas," said Lizzie. "Do you think a really big one would help me find out where all the mountains are?"

For teachers' inspection ONLY

For teachers' inspection ONLY

During math, Lizzie did all sorts of weird problems. She tried to chart the flight path over the mountains.

"You're supposed to be doing addition," whispered Sam.

"I already finished," said Lizzie. "Now, I'm making a graph. I'm trying to get better at math."

