I was born in a magical land filled with beautiful dragons. At least, that's what I always imagined from the stories my dad told me. My birthplace sounded so wonderfully mysterious.

I always dreamed of going back for a visit. I wanted to see the dragons. In fact, I talked about it so much, my mom and dad gave me the nickname "Little Dragon Girl."

One day, my dream came true!

My parents and I made the long journey back to our old hometown. We flew from Los Angeles to China, and then set sail for Dragon Gate Island.

Far in the distance, my dad pointed out two huge rocks rising out of the water, facing each other. Dad explained that on Dragon Gate Island, the rocks were known as the Dragon Arch.

I couldn't wait to get to the island! We were arriving just in time for the Lantern Festival, my favorite part of the New Year celebration.

When we landed on the island, it was abuzz with excitement. Every house was beautifully decorated for the New Year. Grandma met us at the door and hugged me.

"Ah, my Little Dragon Girl's back!"

Grandpa was in the yard, painting the dragon for the dragon dance. Every year during the Lantern Festival, Grandpa is the one who gets to control the head during the dance. I grabbed Grandpa's hand and begged him to stop painting and take me to look for dragons. He hugged me and whispered,

"On the night of the Lantern Festival, we'll slip away and I'll take you dragon hunting!"
