The One That Got Away

Paul Harrison and Tim Archbold

It was early. Akaka was the only one awake.

For Review Only

Quietly, he grabbed his fishing pole and crept out. His family were always treating him like a baby, because he was the youngest. Well, today he would bring back the biggest fish they had ever seen.

For Review Only

for review only

It was cold outside. A scrunching in the snow behind him made Akaka jump, but it was only Amaraq, his dog.

For Preview Only

For review only

"Hush now, Amaraq," said Akaka.
"This trip is not for you.

For Review Only

Fishing is about sitting and waiting and all you know is running and barking. Stay here."

For Preview Only

Akaka set off over the hill to the frozen lake. Amaraq followed anyway, out of sight. An early walk is always an adventure for a dog.

For Review Only

For Review Only