Flight of the Dragons

By Cath Jones

Illustrated by Michelle Simpson

Blaze and the other young dragons were very excited. Today was the day they would learn to fly! Their teacher was a dragon called Smokey. Blaze listened very carefully to her instructions. “Copy me and spread your wings as wide as you can,” Smokey said. She stood on a large rock.

Blaze hopped on to a rock and spread out her wings.

“Now slowly flap,” Smokey said. “Don’t rush!”

Blaze and the other dragons flapped their wings up and down.

“Now, keep flapping and step off your rock.”

Blaze flapped her wings and stepped off...

CRASH! She fell to the ground. All the other dragons whooshed up into the air.

“Wheee!” shrieked Little Leyla.

“Woo-hoo!” yelled Danoosh.

“This is so much fun!” cried Ember.

Blaze climbed back onto her rock. But each time she tried to fly, she crashed to the ground. She felt very sad.

“Why can’t I fly?” she asked.

Smokey checked Blaze's wings. "Oh dear," she said. "Your wings are rather small."

"I was born with little wings," Blaze said. Smokey shook her head sadly.

"I'm sorry, Blaze. Your wings are not big enough for you to fly."

Blaze stared up at all her friends.

If she couldn't fly, how would she reach Tanick Mountain? There was going to be a big party on the mountain, to celebrate the young dragons' first big flight.

She couldn't miss it.
