The Knight Light

By Jenny Jinks

Illustrated by Antonella Fant

Sir Fred the Fearless was the bravest and boldest knight the kingdom had ever seen.

There was no problem too big, no enemy too scary. At the first sign of trouble, Sir Fred would jump on his horse and off he would go. He was ready for anything, and he was always home by bedtime.

Everybody thought Sir Fred was the bravest knight ever.

One morning, there was news of a dragon causing havoc at the far end of the kingdom.

"We need Sir Fred!" the king declared.

"Only he can rid the kingdom of this pest."

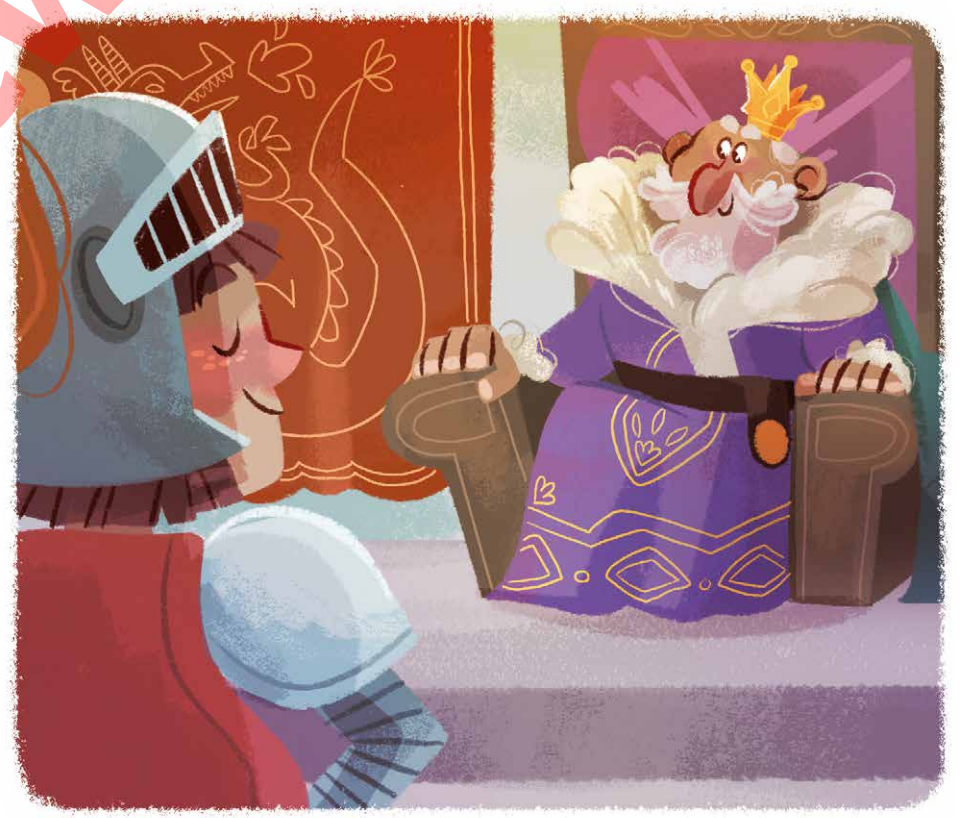

Sir Fred arrived on his trusty horse.

"Go and save our kingdom," the king ordered.

"But be careful," he added in a whisper. "That dragon sounds pretty scary."

"No problem, I'm not scared," Sir Fred replied.

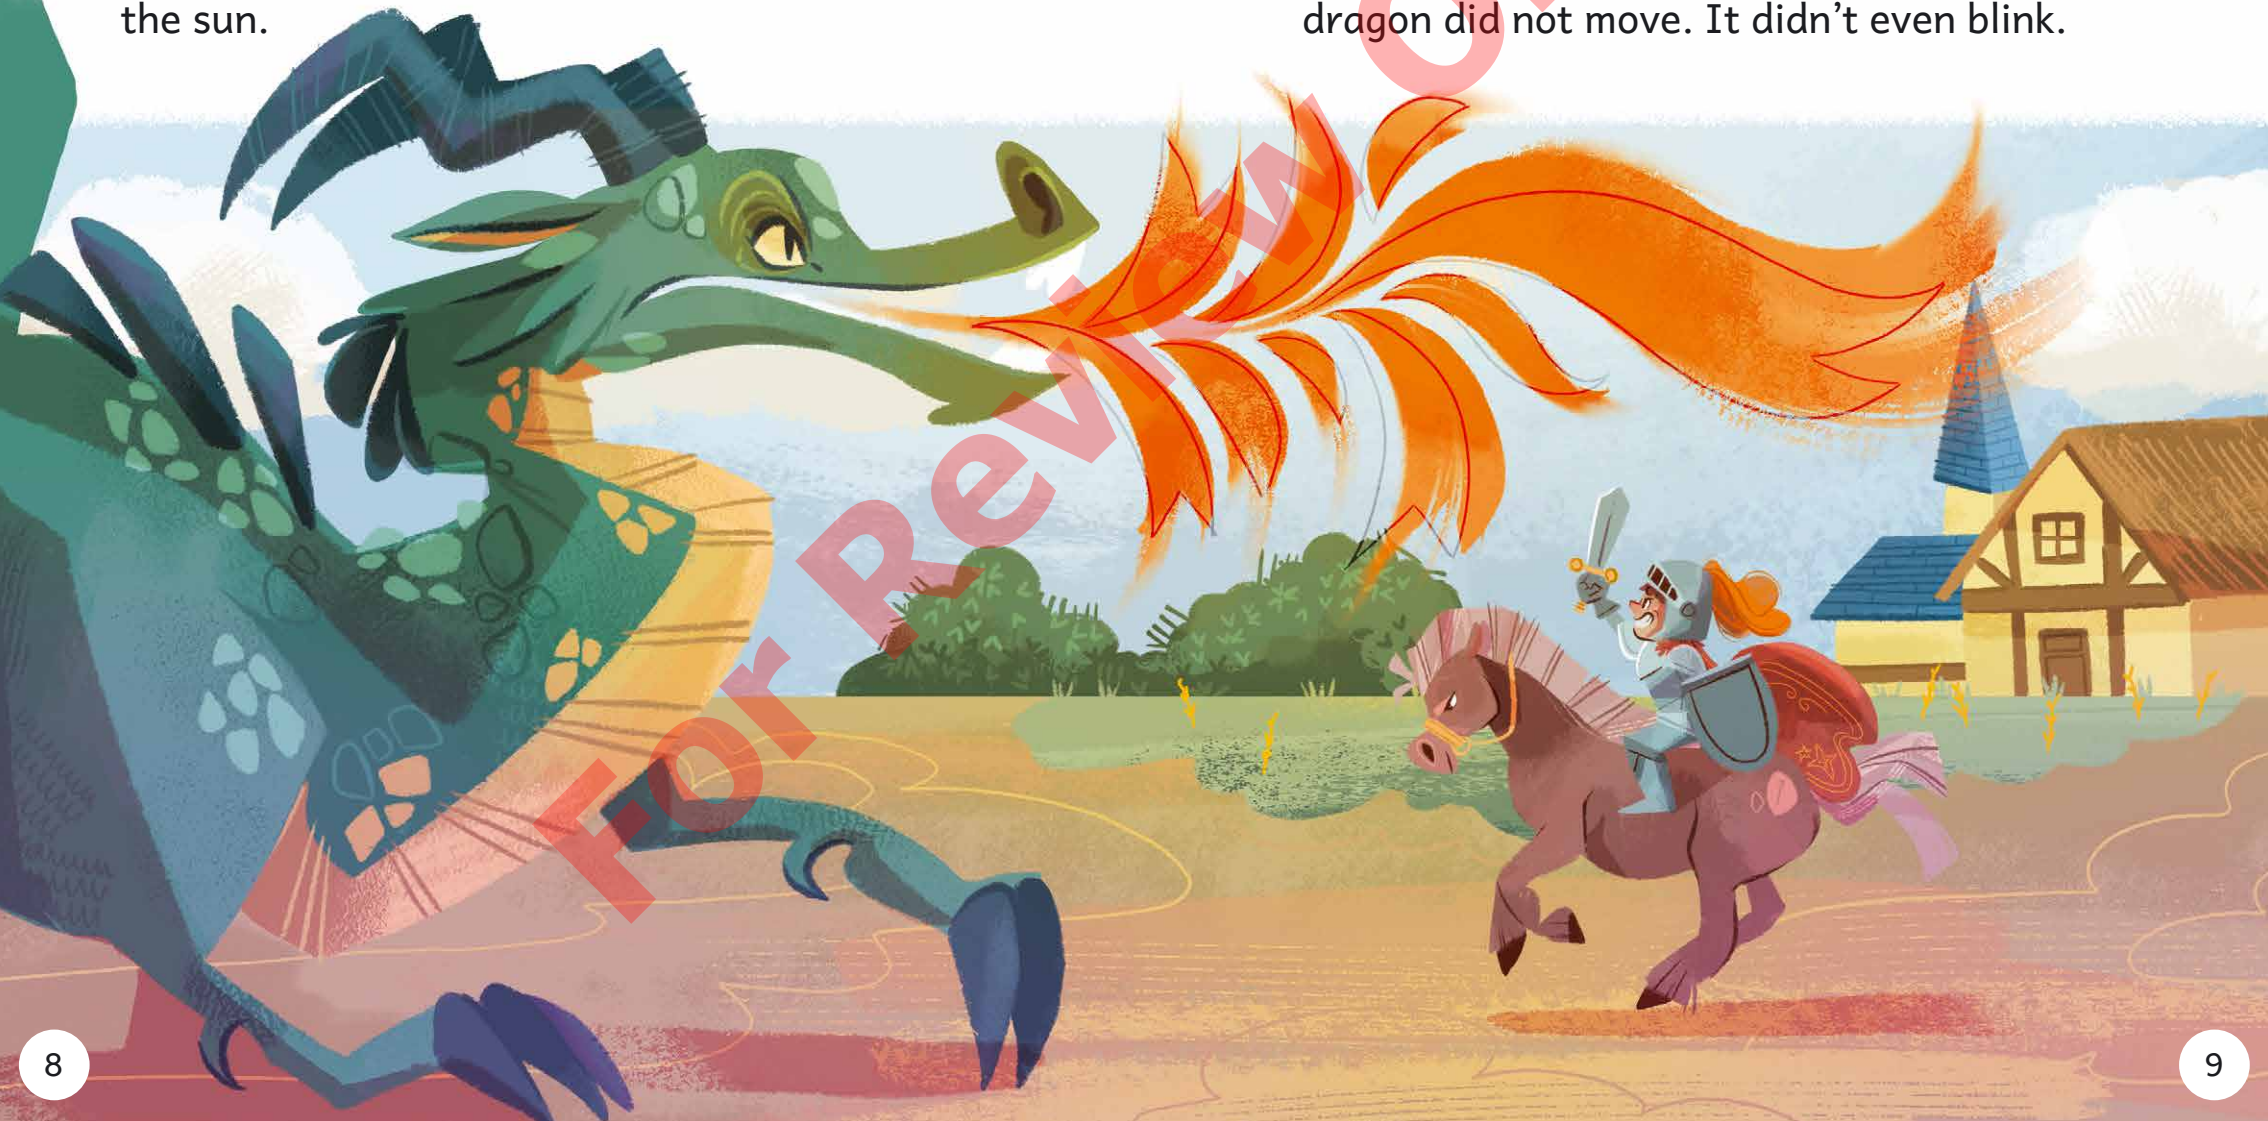

And off he rode, as fearless as ever.

Sir Fred arrived at the far end of the kingdom. The dragon was much bigger than Fred had ever seen before. Its wings were as big as a house. It breathed fire that was hotter than the sun.

But still Sir Fred wasn't scared. He raised his sword, held his shield high and charged towards the dragon at full speed. This would make any normal beast back away. But the dragon did not move. It didn't even blink.
