One sunny day young Robin of Locksley was on his way to Nottingham Town to take part in a shooting competition. Robin was an excellent archer and he wanted to win the competition because the first prize was a purse full of gold. As he was walking through Sherwood Forest, Robin saw a group of foresters eating and drinking...

Forester: Hello, young man! Where are you going on this fine day?

Robin told the foresters that he was going to the shooting competition in Nottingham Town. The foresters laughed.

Forester: Ha, ha! You're too young to be playing with bows and arrows, boy! I know, let's make a little bet. I'm going to choose a target and if you can shoot it, we'll give you fifty silver coins. Are you interested?

Robin: Of course! Choose the target!

Forester: Do you see those deer over there? Shoot one of them!

The forester was pointing at the King's deer, but Robin did not know that they belonged to the King. He took aim and shot one of the deer. The animal fell dead and the foresters jumped to their feet...

Forester: You have killed one of the King's deer! You shouldn't! That's illegal! Now we'll have to put you in jail!

Robin: But you told me to shoot the deer!

Forester: Get him, men! Don't let him get away!

Robin ran into the forest and the foresters chased him until he disappeared. Finally, he stopped running and sat down on a log to think. Robin was very sad. He thought about his home and about Marian, the girl he loved.

Robin: If the King finds out what I have done he'll put me in jail, or worse! I can never go back home again. I can never see Marian again. The forest will be my home now...
